

How Modeling Auditions Differ From Acting, Singing And Theatre Auditions

The main and obvious reason is the amount of performing actually involved in a modeling audition.

The most a model needs to do at an audition is take pictures or possibly walk down a catwalk. The pressure of performing in the moment, like an actor has to, isn't as apparent.

As a model, your portfolio or headshot has been seen, and that is the biggest part of applying for modeling jobs.

By seeing your portfolio, art directors and ad agencies already see what is available through your photos, where as an actor sends a headshot and resume, but still has to be brought in to perform as an actor. A headshot alone will not get an actor a job. Headshots get actors auditions. Portfolios get models jobs.
